By order of the Board of School designed with special adaptability for Trustees, the Washington Normal the dramatic work so cleverly taught by School came into existence September 1.

1872, "for the purpose of preparing for arranged with nice adjustment to class arranged with nice adjustment to class their work, young ladies educated in rooms on this floor. The principal's our schools, and desiring to teach in the office, music and drawing-rooms, study same." These young ladies must have halls and teachers' rooms, are on the is to be devoted to a museum.

The course of study in the Normal School is mainly professional and extends over a period of not less than two years. Upon entering the school each atudent is granted the privilege of choosing between the general course which fits only kindargarten work. In the general course, psychology, history of education, child study, English, history, geography, arithmetic, zoology, school gardening, music, penmanahir and practice teaching are the subjects studied. Kindergarten theory, mother play, and story telling are some of the individual features in the kindergarten course. A course in domestic arts and science may be taken, if desired, three graduates having already been enrolled in this course. The practice department is closely related to the training department, there being sixteen critic schools provided for practice work in the general course and three critic schools for the kindergarten course. One half of the senior class is engaged in academic work, the other half doing the practical work of teaching in the critic schools under super on of experienced teachers.
